Supermarkets ditch piles of unsold but perfectly edible food every single day. What if rescued food could be delivered to kitchens where it turns into a nourishing meal? How would we teach an algorithm to distribute food items in urban communities?

Smuc.kitchen invites you to imagine a community-run urban infrastructure for teaching a machine to distribute food fairly.

Join us for three workshops and a dinner to playfully negotiate the criteria of food distribution, sensing, and cooking and to engage with algorithms and machine learning critically.

The invitation is open to all Basel residents. Participants are ideally available for dinner on March 13 and workshops on March 23, April 13, and April 27. The working languages are English and German.

As a small thank you, participants will receive a StadtBon Basel voucher.
